WHEREAS: The Digital Designers Guild, a group that fosters professional and technical development for students, is interested in working in Baltimore's growing game development and design field. One of the central events that my organization hosts is the Baltimore Independent Game Seminar, a day-long conference that serves as a venue for aspiring game developers to learn from and network with each other through panel discussions, lectures and presentations, and activities hosted throughout the day. This year's featured guests include representatives from across the gaming spectrum, from independent card game developer Jason Corace (Lords & Ladies) to established game development vanguard Sid Meier (Civilization series). The show also features a showcase of student work for a year-long game development contest, which will be judged by a panel of professional game developers.

WHEREAS: The event attracts potential employers and students from other campuses from across the Baltimore metropolitan area and has proven to be a valuable opportunity in the past for individual students to make connections that kick start their careers and in showing to the local game development industry the seriousness of UB's game development program.

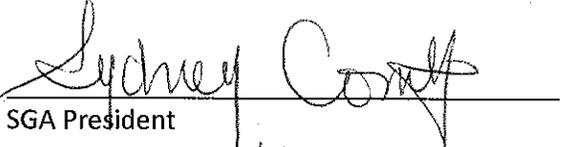

THEREFORE LET IT BE ENACTED THAT:

SECTION 1. The Digital Designers Guild is asking the SGA for a $1,000.00 co-sponsorship of the event. This money will be allocated to support parking, and food for special guests and attendees.
